

New freshwater fishing destination for Central Coast

There's a new tourist attraction on the Central Coast that is fast becoming the hottest destination for avid and aspiring anglers to catch sport sized fish.

Glenworth Valley's new Fishing Park is a recreational fishing facility growing Australian native freshwater fish and is now open for fishing amongst 3000 acres of pristine wilderness.

The park is located on the grounds of Glenworth Valley Outdoor Adventures at Peats Ridge and is proving to be a popular activity over the holiday period, especially with families. Anglers have been enjoying many fruitful days of fishing, with many reporting multiple catches of good sized fish. The park has been re-stocked again recently so there are plenty more fish just waiting to be caught.

"I learnt how to cast and I caught a fish for the first time. I caught three big fish in the first hour and reeled them both in by myself. It was really fun" said Casper Mudge, aged 6, of East Gosford who enjoyed a morning at the Fishing Park with his family.

All the equipment required is supplied and friendly guides are on hand to provide a free fishing lesson and tips on landing the perfect catch. As the Fishing Park is located on private property, no fishing license is required.

Fishing at Glenworth Valley is a great day out for all the family and is suitable for all ages. Enjoy a picnic or BBQ lunch in the picturesque surrounds of the Fishing Park, take a short bushwalk to the spectacular rainforest waterfall or just relax and feed the fish. Also available elsewhere on Glenworth Valley's 3000 acre wilderness property is horse riding, quad biking, kayaking and abseiling adventures and 200 acres of riverfront camping.
